Plasma-sprayed calcium-phosphate coatings on PEEK/alumina composite materials. A novel approach to the use of plasma-sprayed calcium phosphate coatings was employed as a surface treatment of PEEK/alumina composite materials. The plasma-sprayed coating was applied to PEEK rods with a surface roughness of $R_q = 4.6$ microm before alumina infiltration. In this study, composites prepared by varying the powder to plastic mass ratio (1 : 1.5 to 1 : 3) were subjected to characterization. The samples were analyzed using a scanning electron microscope (SEM), energy dispersive x-ray (EDX) analysis, and x-ray diffraction (XRD). It is found that surface roughness of the coated samples increased with the increase in the mass ratio of alumina powder to PEEK. These samples exhibit significantly improved physicochemical properties such as mechanical, thermal, and dielectric properties. Furthermore, samples with higher alumina powder to PEEK ratios show more resistance to thermal and mechanical degradation when subjected to accelerated aging tests. An analysis of the composite reinforced with the plasma-sprayed coating exhibits an improvement in the mechanical properties. Long-term results of ligation of arteriovenous malformations. The long-term efficacy of operative ligation of arteriovenous malformations was studied in 43 patients in whom arteriovenous fistula creation was unsuccessful. Malformations were located in the upper extremity (n = 22), lower extremity (n = 7), pelvis (n = 5), and head/neck (n = 5). Causes of failure included improper selection of arterial inflow (n = 24), inadequate venous drainage (n = 9), heavy arterial steal (n = 8), and lack of technical proficiency (n = 2). Total obliteration (n = 37) resulted in fistula failure in only three patients. If surgically placed, occlusion balloons and coils prevented fistula creation in 15 of 43 patients (35%). During an average follow-up period of 42.5 months, four patients developed recurrent hemorrhage necessitating a return to operation. For palliation of chronic pain (n = 9) or tumor-related problems (n = 4), salvage surgery was accomplished in four patients.
