Sarcocystis bovicanis is an unusual sarcocyst of variable length (15-30 microm) that develops in granulomas formed in the superficial dermis and subcutis of the raccoon, Procyon lotor. The sarcocyst wall is composed of six to eight layers of two types of granules: 1) large, homogeneous, electron-lucent, polyhedral granules that form the innermost layer and are situated between the plasma membrane and the ground substance of the wall and 2) smaller electron-dense granules that form a multilayered wall and envelope a central body that contains bradyzoites. The body of the sarcocyst is characterized by a large, eosinophilic, vesicular nucleoid. This sarcocyst was found in three raccoons captured in southern Texas 09e8f5149f
