"There are a lot of things that come to our mind and, of course, we would have to look at them very carefully before proceeding to any kind of cooperation." Indian foreign secretary S Jaishankar said, responding to a question at an interaction with TOI. "After all it is not just our being there that matters, but what kind of engagement do we have," he said. Read | Just a border? India refuses to resume talks on Kashmir at Pak-Afghan border "Whatever might have happened in the past, our engagement needs to change, or it's not going to work," he said. Kashmir was in the news recently with Pakistan saying it would rather engage the new government, led by Imran Khan, than India. But the Indian foreign secretary has strong words for Islamabad, saying it "depends" on Pakistan's "past behaviour". "When the last government of the PA [Pakistan-Afghanistan] was here with Pakistan, how much trust did we have in them?" he asked. "Our mutual trust on issues like this has to increase." Jaishankar said: "We don't have any expectations on what the new Pakistani government will do. We certainly don't have any expectation that it will change the facts on the ground." He added that with the current talks held at the Afghan-Tajik border continuing, the possibility that the dialogue can be revived is "technically possible". "But I don't expect that to happen anytime soon," he said. Jaishankar's comments come at a time when India has witnessed a sharp increase in 3e33713323
