The overarching objective of this proposal is to further expand the University of Arizona Cancer Center's (UACC's) emphasis in cancer biomarker and translational research for breast and lung cancer. The goal is to address the issues of cancer biomarker and translational research, with particular emphasis on applying technology-driven insights to the clinic and the broader public, by developing translational research training and mentoring opportunities. The UACC, like many other cancer centers, lacks a good pipeline of trained investigators in cancer biomarker and translational research. A primary purpose of this planning process is to develop strategies to create a safe and protected environment for junior faculty members, postdoctoral fellows and medical students pursuing translational research in cancer biomarker and genomics. Thus, the specific aims of this planning process are: 1) To further develop the UACC's existing translational research curriculum, 2) To launch a pilot project to develop a new program in cancer biomarker and translational research for faculty at the UACC, 3) To establish a steering committee and a planning group to continue to grow the existing efforts in cancer biomarker and translational research at the UACC, 4) To create a mentoring program to support junior faculty and junior scientists in developing their skills and expertise in performing cancer biomarker and translational research, with a particular focus on developing women in cancer research, 5) To establish a training program to train medical students and postdoctoral fellows in the development of cancer biomarker and translational research, and 6) To develop a website with information on cancer biomarker and translational research for the UACC and the broader public.

RELEVANCE: A major goal of many cancer centers is to maintain and develop a pipeline of new investigators in cancer biomarker and translational research. This planning process will help the University of Arizona Cancer Center to accomplish this objective.

Q: How can I automatically exclude a project from a lifecycle in TFS Build 2010? I have a build definition with a number of steps. In this project I am running an automated build and an automated release script. I would like the build to not execute the release script if the build fails. I am using the Exec task and am wondering if there is any way to exclude that project from the execution of the build? I know I can do it at the build stage, but

From 1989 to 2009, Leslie Sansone has partnered with Waters to release her Walk Away the Pounds workouts, now known as Simple Plan Strength Training.

Though the program was a great success, the Walk Away the Pounds formats were not consistent; many walks had cardio workouts that were not leading to a healthy weight loss, and the DVD workouts were not optimized for all ranges of strength training. The Simple Plan Strength Training DVD (aka Super Fat Burning) is an update to the format in the hopes of providing a more realistic workout for all ranges of strength. Les
