Another CPU Meter is a handy little widget that allows you to measure the load of your CPU from your desktop. Another CPU Meter is fully widgetized, and is divided into two parts. Along with displaying the load of your CPU, the widget also displays useful system information. Another CPU Meter allows you to:

- Change the appearance of the widget
- Change the size of the widget, and resize it to any size or resolution that you want.
- Change the background of the widget
- Change the opacity of the widget
- Only show the CPU load or CPU Temperature when your mouse pointer is over the widget.
- Detach the widget from the desktop

Another CPU Meter Widget will give you the current CPU load on your computer. Every 15 seconds it will graph the load from 1 to 100. Although I cannot say for sure this may not change in the future as it is a very fresh project. The design of this widget is built to withstand the physical conditions of an old and dusty place inside a monitor. The widget will hide if you hover on it or click the Hide Me button. If you click the tooltips it will give you the basic features such as About, CPU Usage & CPU Load. Ideal for tucking away in a corner. Another CPU Meter widget displays, right on your desktop the load of your PC CPU. Every 15 seconds it will graph the load from 1 to 100. Although I cannot say for sure this may not change in the future as it is a very fresh project. The design of this widget is built to withstand the physical conditions of an old and dusty place inside a monitor. This will fade from the screen and will never load. If you hover on it or click the Hide Me button, this widget will disappear from the screen. Another CPU Meter General Features: - Add a nice widget, simple to use and free to use - Displays the current CPU load - It only works if you are on a Microsoft Windows system - It only works if your CPU is not overloaded and using no less than 25% of its load. Why Another CPU Meter? There is a very simple reason why Another CPU Meter is in general so widely used and very useful. The first reason is it displays in some case the real load of your CPU. With the exception of some systems that make use of a designed enhanced CPU Monitor, most other systems use the standard Windows task manager for displaying the CPU load. As that program is not very well designed in term of accuracy and is still somewhat hit and miss. Another CPU Meter solves this problem by simply displaying the CPU load in an accurate manner. A good example of a widget that displays the CPU load and various other parameters is the Windows 7 Resource Monitor. This widget is a very accurate widget, as it can tell you exactly how much time you are spending on x
