The new Markup Import feature lets you import textual information from any file type, including paper and PDF files, and incorporate that information into your drawings. As you import data, you can choose to create a new drawing for the information or associate that data with existing objects in your drawings. This lets you capture feedback from an image or a paper prototype, and can be used in a variety of ways, such as to set a part number for an assembly or to identify a group of components. To import and incorporate feedback from an image, you simply insert it using the Markup Import option on the Draw command bar. The user interface for this option changes, depending on the file format you choose. You can also upload a PDF document, a Web page, a Word document, or a series of printed photos that you want to import into your drawings, using the Markup Import feature. If you want to incorporate the data in the drawing file with data already in your drawing, you can make the text and your existing data represent the same object in the drawing, or you can create a new object in your drawing to capture and keep the information together. If you choose to create a new drawing with the imported information, the drawing can be tailored to the information, such as by assigning an object a tool and shape for the feedback. You can also use the Markup Import feature to import a template, and then populate it with the new content. You can also use the Markup Import feature to import content from a file or Web page and export it back to the original file. This makes it easier to share design ideas with your team and clients. The system also works with PDFs, which are easy to print and distribute. Two new 2D documents are available: PDF Comment Sheet, and PDF Color Guide. The PDF Comment Sheet enables you to comment on and make changes to the contents of a PDF file using Autodesk Design Review (or other PDF editing tools) and upload that change to the file. The PDF Color Guide enables you to associate a color name with a color using a palette of colors you select in your drawings. (video: 2:10 min.) You can use the Markup import feature to create a PDF of the text and insert it as a comment in a PDF file. This helps with creating a legend or adding notes to a PDF file. In addition to the change comments, you can tag the file with keywords and other descriptive information. You
