I/O Version The original version of Hover Attack was published in 1984 by Kogaku-Sha. It is an 8-bit robot game in which the player is a fighter pilot and the target of the enemy is a robot that flies around. If the fighter is hit, the pilot is ejected and falls to the ground. However, the fighter has a limited amount of ammunition and the player is essentially "on his own" in the game. The player must use his limited bullets to destroy the target by continuously shooting at it, and he also must protect his fighter from enemies. The player can replenish his bullets by combining with his carrier, and can also make use of the carrier to help him escape from attackers or by creating bridges in the air. Although the game is a one-on-one, the game play has two stages: In the first stage, "the enemy" attacks. In the second stage, "the player" attacks. The main aim of the game is to destroy the target in the second stage. The player must also protect his carrier in the first stage and delay the enemy attack in the second stage. The player has to be constantly vigilant, as if he hits the target, he will be defeated by the enemy, and on the contrary, if he does not destroy the target, he will be left with an enemy carrier, which can be used against him in the second stage. When you run out of ammunition, you can replenish your supply by combining with your Carrier, and since the game is over even if your Carrier is hit by a certain number of bullets, it is important to keep your Carrier in a safe place. The memory capacity of the original version was only 16K.

Full Version The full version of Hover Attack is a port of the original, with slightly larger but less detailed graphics. The "memory capacity" is expanded to 32K and some sprites were changed (in particular, enemy carriers are replaced by smaller versions). In addition, the weapon effect sound has been added. In this port

What's new in Don't Bite Me Bro! - Rifle:

4 Tele-Risk + Acer Predator Helios 300, Atop a fancy magnesium-alloy frame, the Helios 300 is one superlative Android tablet. Our top pick right now for most people's phones. The very sturdy construction of this 7-inch tablet is really impressive. At just $199, this tablet absolutely flies, likely coming in under $230, even with freight. And it's better at all-round productivity than nearly all other 7-inch tablets of this price. We'd like to see a 10-inch version with 12 hours of battery life, though... The Helios 300 is the only 10-inch Android tablet in the budget space at the moment, and that's too bad. Games or productivity applications: Priceless. Just buy it. Audiobook + Acer Aspire B3-706T, It's a huge-screened tablet but it's very light -- 43 grams is a pretty slim weight. Add a solid keyboard (we really like these Logitech keyboards; they're so great for the iPad) and you've got a simple but slick tablet. Full-featured for less than $400. Fractional Mac + Mac Mini 4G v2, It's real, it's finally here, and it's finally inexpensive. Multiple versions, though, require different sizes. Check (via 8to4buy.com) before buying. Buying used, a non-Mac version will keep you at home for far less than even half the price of the new one -- just be sure to do your homework (see 1-2-3-4). Tablets + Samsung iFrame EB5 Something new: View all the technical data on the Internet at once from a single Web browser tab in this windowing tablet. Screen: Full HD. It's thin enough to be easily mobile, and with Windows 8, should be easy for consumers to set up. With added options, this looks like a quick and easy holiday gift. Game controller + Samsung 900K Royal Magic Wired Controller, A full-fledged Xbox 360 controller with HDMI -- no extra adapters. God, this is everything a gamer wants in one device. * Note: An Xbox 360 version has since been announced. Headset
