through 1994. Rates of in-hospital and 30-day mortality were compared among general hospital discharges between hospitals with similar geographic characteristics: rural facilities in the state that were more than 25 miles from an urban/suburban hospital in the same county; rural hospitals in the same county in the same state that were located more than 25 miles from another rural facility in the same county; and urban/suburban hospitals in the same county in the same state. The in-hospital mortality rate (6.2%) for all hospitals was lower than the 30-day mortality rate (7.8%) for all hospitals. For rural hospitals, in-hospital mortality rates (6.5%) were lower than the 30-day mortality rates (8.0%), but the difference was not statistically significant. Rural hospitals in the same county with a rural institution in Pennsylvania were not more likely to have a higher in-hospital (odds ratio 1.16; 95% CI 0.61, 2.21) or 30-day (odds ratio 0.92; 95% CI 0.58, 1.48) mortality rate than rural hospitals in the same state. However, urban/suburban hospitals in the same
