"Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements has all the beauty and sophistication that you would expect from this legendary game series, but I feel that it just falls short on the experience side of things. It's a huge problem, as I don't see how they could've included more elements to the game than they did when they built it the first time around." "Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements is a charming game, and as much of a continuation of the tradition as The Hobbit is to The Lord of the Rings series." "Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements is easily my favorite installment in the series." "There are numerous visual, audio, and gameplay aspects I enjoy in Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements, though that doesn't excuse the glaring area of flaws that cause its quality to dip so much below that of the first 2 games. Some of the levels of play in these three games are as good as any game I've ever played, and its exploration and replayability are unmatched. Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements fails to deliver the best of what it was once a shining example of, but it remains an enjoyable game in its own right." "Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements is an RPG that shows a great range of gameplay, regardless of its age. There are numerous visual, audio, and gameplay aspects I enjoy in Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements, though that doesn't excuse the glaring area of flaws that cause its quality to dip so much below that of the first two games. Some of the levels of play in these three games are as good as any game I've ever played, and its exploration and replayability are unmatched. It doesn't reach the heights of its predecessors in every aspect, but it's still a fun game that offers a great deal of variety. " "Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements will change the way you look at the genre, giving you a sense of freedom that hasn't been seen in any other game before. This action role-playing game will keep you interested with its wide variety of settings and environments, which are both familiar and new. The Elven Ring series has always been a bit slow-paced, but this game gives you a new feeling of speed and excitement. Elven Ring: Master of the Five Elements is the best RPG I've ever played. Title says it all. The game is awful on a 23" FHD display. Text is small, over crowded and the character size is greatly reduced. Playing the game with the monitor turned on the game screen is a disaster. If you have a macbook or macbook pro, avoid this game at all costs. It's a rip off. They could at least make it work on the macbook. Amazing 4 By JoeT2 This game is everything you've come to expect of a Baldur's Gate type game, it has much more though. Beautiful detail, impossibly beautiful animations on characters, combat is great so far but needs a few more additions before the perfect balance is formed. Elden Ring - Beauty and Brokenness 5 By sun01081 I was impressed with the different combat modes, and the dark atmosphere which makes the game play at night. The combat is a breath of fresh air because of the overheads included of dancing. I also really love the motion capture animations. They give the game so much more life and an atmosphere to them that it's almost cinematic. As for the characters, every character has a backstory, or absence thereof, which makes them diverse. Each character has a job description, what they look like, and general backstory. The few gripes I have is not all classes have a clearly defined impact on the game, being stated as the elf drow wizard. The names are clunky (Paladins Academy?), and the dialogues are a little too blunt for my taste, but the narrator is adding to the atmosphere. Dungeon Siege with no need to press any buttons 5 By deweg In a perfect game dungeon siege would be an interactive movie, but as we all know on mac OS X Lion that's not possible with java. I am a huge fan of the bold 2D engine that the game is made on. The controls would be perfect if you didn't have to press any buttons or anything you would find at rest in real life. Things like the D-pad or track ball on a laptop could be more preferably used to control movement. It's annoying that you have to jump onto the map thing to move instead of just walking to it. A bit of a downside is the character's couldn't be rappelling and swimming...also there are lots of creatures that will run off

Light emitting diodes (LEDs) offer substantial potential benefits over traditional light sources in terms of energy savings and long life. However, the low directivity of light emitted by LEDs means that the light has a low effect on objects near the light source. This leads to poor illumination of objects and thus limits the use of LEDs. A number of methods of producing narrow angle light distribution have been developed, and many of these involve reflecting the light to produce a desired distribution. For example, LEDs have been arrayed on a reflector that reduces the light emitted towards the edges of the reflector, or on a hood that directs light out of the sides of the reflector. To create high intensity, narrow angle light distribution patterns, it is known to provide multiple LED sources arranged at an acute angle to the optical axis. In order to shape the light distribution, the LED light sources are either arrayed on a curved reflective surface, such as a paraboloid, or on multiple curved reflective surfaces, for example as described in WO 2007/009755. By reflecting the light from the different LED sources, the light from each LED source is reflected to at least one of the surfaces, which together curve the light towards a desired direction. Such light shaping techniques can provide high intensity and narrow angle light distributions, but are relatively complex, expensive and heavy. There are known various light-emitting devices for illuminating a target by such as a light-emitting diode (LED) and a light-emitting diode array (LEDA). In recent years, the light-emitting devices such as the LEDA are being developed, and the LEDs have been also put to practical use in the field of backlights of displays such as liquid-crystal displays and personal computers, lighting devices, indoor/outdoor signboards, and the like. An LED or the like used as a light source of these light-emitting devices is used under the conditions of high brightness. In this case, there is a problem that the brightness of the light emitted from the light-emitting device will become momentarily low, which is a phenomenon called a darkening of the light source called "dark spot" or "hot spot". As one of countermeasures for this problem, there is known a technique for providing a light-receiving element at each light-emitting element in the light-emitting device so as to detect the light emitted from the light-emitting element and
