orted Muse links I've swamped through most of my links and it's difficult to cut anything, so I'll just go through my favorites that struck me as being unusual or simply fun. Suzie Levine running through the halls of the Museum of Fine Arts yesterday definitely grabbed my attention. I had to take a picture of her and take a gander at the subtitle, which swelled head and shoulders above the title. But really, how many times do we see a newspaper drawing of a living person or national figure in the "I'm Out this Town" style? Moreover, the delicious fact that a newspaper could portray somebody as a "princess" is so self-referential that I'm left wondering if Levine's piece is just a departure from her usual comic and depressing subjects. When I was 13-14, I ran across a vintage Mickey Mouse newspaper comic called "The American House" (I've always been fascinated by old comic strips) and loved the idea of a dead Mickey, with an obituary in the same strip. I looked around for "The American House" comic outside of my household when I was in high school, and couldn't find it. To be fair, my aunt, uncle, and grandparents had moved over the years and filled their time with a curious mix of reading, fishing, and watching Holiday on the NBC sitcom starring Jonathan Frid and Jackie Gleason. Perhaps it fell into that black hole of the '50s, when newspapers were folding left and right and those of us who bought comics at newsstands were doing so in anticipation of lost kids like me who only bought from our parents, on the off-chance that one of them might still be out there somewhere. Or maybe I just lost the comic in a house move. However, despite my valiant efforts to search out the strip and its national syndication, I never found it. Since I've learned of the existence of "The American House" and the beautiful blog RIPTODAVEDBYMORCY that started tracking down a buyer for "The American House" in the '80s, I've become even more aware of period humor printed in the newspapers of various metropolitan centers. Tom McGowan's wonderful newish blog, IN THE PAGES OF OUR PRIVATE FEARS reveals poignant glimps
