“The development of these technologies is a key objective of our studio, and we are very proud of the work done on bringing a new level of realism into the game,” said Aaron McHardy, lead producer at EA Canada. “The incredible reception and feedback we’ve had from our community since we announced this in January, has helped shape a gameplay experience unlike any other. We’re in an important moment for our studio and we look forward to partnering with our passionate community to make the next generation of FIFA games possible.” For information on all the other FIFA content updates made by the studio since its reveal in January of this year, check out our Play Video FIFA 22 features a new Championship Mode and Career Mode. In Championship Mode, players are awarded a set number of gold stars based on goals, assists, being named Player of the Month and more, with the goal being to win the UEFA Champions League and the FIFA Club World Cup. “This is my first FIFA game, and I’m excited to share my first career,” said Andrew Yip, Co-Founder of EA Vancouver. “An opportunity to work closely with World Cup winners like the German and French National Teams and players from the FIFA Premier League and the MLS is an honor, and I know this game is going to be a celebration of football. We’ve created a new Mode that goes beyond player appearances, starting with the new MyPLAYER, but also allowing players to go deeper into the game’s tactics and formation changes.” FIFA 22 brings a host of improvements, addressing fan feedback. The goalkeeping system was streamlined and the amount of time in between saves was increased. Defenders can now dive and recover from high shots. Referees no longer blow whistles in the correct direction during fouls; instead, they acknowledge the foul has been committed and there is no penalty. Fans can now add their own voices to the Anthem, which was redesigned to feel more organic. In Career Mode, new celebrations were added, new abilities unlocked, improved lighting and weather effects, as well as the ability to view and analyse the match film. There are more on-field improvements, too. Defenders have better collision detection, allowing them to tackle well-executed runs. FIFA 22 sees a boost to player likeness and animations, alongside an expansion of Coach Abilities
