Used with.Killer Lightning Though it received a few upgrades over the years, the Atari 7800 has nonetheless remained a relative failure among the company's 8-bit and 16-bit digital consoles. With Rare developing an original Xbox title based on GoldenEye 007 to be developed exclusively for the system (and later, the PS2), it was decided to end production of the platform. Three months after the system's release, these components, including both the 7800 and 7800XL, were discontinued altogether. In addition to the system's own Killer Lightning (a Trojan Horse game often used to unlock unreleased games) and Killer T.N.T. (a speeder/trucker/tank game) for use with Atari's own Double Dragon game, as well as the now-defunct Brain Charge game (which can be used with Killer Lightning to unlock another unreleased game), the system contains some unique titles of its own. These include a number of platform and puzzle-focused games that cater to the 7800's limited capabilities and, perhaps most importantly, two killer-themed arcade games that were meant to be used in conjunction with Killer Lightning to unlock unreleased games. Killer Lightning Arcade Killer Lightning is an arcade game developed by Radical Entertainment (who later went on to create Gauntlet: Slayer Edition) and released for the Atari 7800 in 1993. It is an arcade game that, much like Gauntlet, takes place in a maze-like

Immunocytochemical identification of transforming growth factor-beta in human colonic mucosa. The authors have previously demonstrated that transforming growth factor-beta (TGF-beta) is present in human colonic mucosa. Herein, the authors present the first immunocytochemical study of TGF-beta in human colonic mucosa with particular reference to the effects of TGF-beta on the resident colonic cell population. TGF-beta (1 U) was applied to the apical surface of fixed human colonic mucosa in vitro. The mucosa was incubated with anti-TGF-beta primary antibody (polyclonal TGF-beta-1) at 37 degrees C for 3 h. Secondary antibody (goat-anti-rabbit IgG conjugated with fluorescein isothiocyanate) was applied at room temperature for 1 h. When stained with fluorescein isothiocyanate-conjugated phalloidin, filamentous actin was present in the apical regions of the colonic mucosa. Immunostained areas were identified with a confocal microscope. Basal portions of colonic crypts were not stained and crypt necks were weakly stained. Cells in the lower thirds of the colonic glands were stained basally, especially near to nuclei. Cells in the middle third of the colonic glands were stained. Most of the cells in the upper third of the gland were stained. These data provide supporting evidence that the middle third of the colonic crypts are the most likely site of TGF-beta production. Further, the data add to the evidence that TGF-beta is essential for normal
