method for producing a skinned fibre (hereinafter referred to as "skinned fibre sheet") is known, for example, from German Patent Document AT-A 2 205 825 (equivalent to corresponding German Patent Document 36 28 979), in which a continuous fibrous sheet is passed on a support surface through a bath of liquid in which the fibres are softened and then after the fibres have been removed from the bath and they have attained a desired length they are squeezed with a squeegee to yield a so-called skinned fibre sheet which has an increased fibre volume. However, this squeegee squeezes the fibres transverse to their longitudinal direction which may be detrimental to the skinned fibres. Another method is to soften the fibres in the bath, let them run out on the support surface and let them dry. However, this method does not yield a sheet which has an increased fibre volume as a result of skinning.Molecular characterization of the Enterobacter cloacae and Klebsiella pneumoniae belonging to MGH 307 and affiliated with multidrug-resistant E. cloacae UTI ST258, based on new random amplified polymorphic DNA (RAPD) markers.
