Well here we have the new logo for Struk Spbu open source graffiti club in Bulgaria, a.k.a. all other versions of Struk everywhere. Struk is no longer a community based open source project, but now developed by an advertising agency called "Kantarda". The old Struk logo has been used for over 2 decades as well. Meanwhile the founding team of this open source community has simply decided to do something different with the project, and let it go its own way. Struk is an open source project, it's free, but not to be confused with free software. The development will be done in Bulgarian, any help in language translating would be appreciated. If you don't see a font name in the name column, then it is likely to be just a font file rather than a font program. If you see a name like FTC or FSA (Fear, Fantasy, and Science) then you should be able to search for it through Google or Bing. Q: When using AppHarbor with an xunit test, the tests are run in the background on the wrong platform In the project I'm working on, I'm using xUnit.net to run my integration tests (which use moq to mock some external services), and we use AppHarbor as our continuous integration environment. Our integration tests are passing, but our unit tests are running on the wrong platform (x86, while we are actually running x64) and are failing with an unhandled exception of UnauthorizedAccessException (despite being running as a user with full permissions). This only seems to happen when the tests are run with xunit; if we run them using "dotnet test", the tests run fine (and pass). How can I get xUnit.net to run using the correct platform? Also, I'm getting a bit frustrated that xUnit.net requires me to manually run all my tests through the Continuous Build, I would have hoped that there would be some way to set it up such that this happens automatically - and that the xUnit framework could configure the correct.NET runtimes etc (I'm a little confused how I could even use xUnit in the first place, if it doesn't correctly support running tests for the correct platform!) Update: It looks like xUnit.net uses the.NET runtime as part of the test setup, so it doesn't run with the correct platform, which then throws an exception Running mono tests with xunit.runner.xunit.dll, xunit.runner.utility.dll /work/xunit.runner.2012.10.exe /home/dwarven/Builds/xunit.unity3d/xunit.unity3d.csproj/TestResults/xunit.unity3d.results.zip': /work/xunit.unity3d.dll: not found 0cc13bf012

Follow Me Instagram: Pages Tuesday, August 27, 2014 Some good things to do in Bangalore Bangalore has the kind of sunny climate that you really don't need a reason to enjoy a walk around the place. There is a wide variety of sights to see and all you need is some time and a little bit of common sense. 1. Photographs at MG Road. They say photographing is fun, and well, this street really is a lot of fun to photograph. It's really interesting to see how the same stretch of road takes a different look in the day or in the evening depending on time of the day or night. Going on a photo safari with a chance of running into some old friends is probably the most fun. 2. Climb Subramaniam

Memorial Swamy Temple A walk around the statue of Subramaniam swamy is a very pleasant experience. The view from the top of the temple is just beautiful and to realize the scale of the statue you need to look down. The sight of the temple from the top becomes a bit disturbing, as it's difficult to see the details. 3. See the light at the Madiwala Darshan One of the nicest things about Bangalore is that the light in that place never really stops and makes it very interesting to take pictures in the evening or early in the morning. 4. Visit the goings on at Cubbon Park Come here on weekends, like I did, to see the car raj dancing. 5. Visit the Flower Market While visiting the flower market
