This quest, written for the Genoese tradition of the game, is the answer to a question put forth by the noble Leonas Guadagni. The nobleman invites you to try and recover the Cathrinite, hidden in a Castle, that can be used to build Elia's Tower. What's new in Quest For Cathrinite:

anaerobic bioremediation in Philippine freshwaters. Many freshwater ecosystems around the world are being threatened by nutrient pollution. The Philippine Commission for Cleanliness and Orderliness has authorized prophylactic measures against pollution, yet illegal and unconventional disposal of sewage into water bodies have led to deterioration of river and lake ecosystems. Here, we examined bacterial denitrification, which is a key component of biogeochemical processes, in streams around the Philippines to evaluate potential impacts of pollution on the carbon and nitrogen cycles of freshwater ecosystems. Multivariate statistical techniques were used for a detailed examination of 11 sediment and water samples from three streams and nine lakes during a 10-day and a 24-week water-column incubation period. Moderate to strong denitrifying activity was observed in all the samples. Sediments from upstream and downstream environments of one of the tributaries showed a significantly higher nitrate reduction activity ($P < 0.05$) than other sampled sediments. A similar trend was evident for reductive activity recorded by reaction with salicylate, with greater activity in the upstream environments. Despite the freshwater ecosystems being within a food-secure area and abundantly supplied with organic and inorganic nutrients, denitrification rates were insufficient to support sufficient carbon and nitrogen turnover rates for the communities of aquatic biota.

Providing a theoretical basis for nutrient release via denitrification without attendant visible impact on the environment, this study is also proof that pollutant-degrading bacteria can be easily identified by using the reaction systems with highly selective screening methods in a downstream location and monitoring samples over time.

But if I try replacing like I said (.\s+) it does not work. The new line (myString) can
