The invention relates to a device for controlling a brake system of an automotive vehicle having a control device for controlling the braking system, which controls a characteristic of at least one brake pressure of the braking system by way of a system pressure. In such a device, a parameter of a pressure supply of a component of the braking system can be detected in a direct way by means of a wheel sensor to be described below. Devices of this type are known. They are used in various applications for controlling the braking system, such as control of a relative slip of driving wheels of a vehicle. From German Patent Document DE 3,850,123 A1, a device is known for controlling the braking system, in which braking pressure is controlled automatically by a control device for controlling the braking system, wherein the control device controls the actual value of the pressure supplied to the braking system so as to avoid overshoots. By way of a sensor for detecting the air pressure of the supply line and evaluating it, the control device checks the actual value and the desired value of the air pressure supplied to the braking system. When there is a surplus of brake pressure, in order to avoid underpressure, the actual value is reduced. When there is a deficit of brake pressure, in order to avoid overpressure, the actual value is increased. The device in turn comprises an electric motor, with which the pressure supply line can be displaced. From German Patent Document DE 3,803,529 A1, a device for controlling a braking system is known, in which a pressure supply line connects a master cylinder to an auxiliary pressure reservoir of the braking system. An electric motor is provided to drive a pump of the pressure supply line, which can be displaced by way of
