Andrew Cuomo and the Park Avenue subway plan finally will allow residents and riders to understand just how much tax money is being spent on a project estimated to cost more than $3 billion. "One of the reasons that I say I've been slow to push this is because I want people to understand this is a $3 billion project, not a $3 million project. And when you're talking about that type of amount of money, there are needs that go beyond just the construction and the tunneling. There are safety procedures, there are streetscape, there are piers, there are housing projects," the governor told reporters at a Park Avenue subway press conference. The press conference is intended to emphasize the need for residents, investors, and other stakeholders in the project to understand the costs and know where the money is coming from. Cuomo announced the development of the Park Avenue subway at the corner of East 72nd Street and East 67th Street on Monday. He announced Thursday that his administration was

Foggy Bottom, known within the body politic as the nation's most powerful bureaucracy, is rich in the ability to "spin" its stories. In the early days of the Obama administration, it was the narrative that the birth certificate issue was resolved. So people were stunned that it came up again and bothered to ask about it. Until it didn't. Mary Katherine Coughlan, then head of the White House Office of Public Engagement, rose to the occasion. Her official statement was epic in its delivery. It portrayed the issue as something it wasn't, as the Obama campaign's contention that the president had birth documentation. It read: "The White House does not release the President's birth certificate. However, the President does have a long-form birth certificate. The President and his mother have undergone the process of having their records examined and certified by the appropriate authorities in Hawaii. The President is not required to release the certificate, as he has chosen not to do so." The statement was picked up by NPR and David Jackson, of the White House pool. Jackson had the spin and Coughlan the spinmeister. Then things got very interesting. In June, Obama camp officials were so upset by the Coughlan statement that they demanded that officials of the Daily Caller cease sending questions about the birth certificate to the press. They said that the White House press office was forcing them to answer and that something was going to change. We all presumed they would stop asking the question or some such nonsense. That didn't happen. They're still asking. So the Coughlan strategy, which described the president as having something, became false. Then it was argued that Obama himself had not only the birth certificate, but the birth announcement and the parents' death certificate as well. One explanation for this spin is that what started as the rational, simple explanation of a birth certificate has become something that even the faithful are angry about. Given the number of times and in such a way that the Obama administration has placed out here in the electorate is the

For Equestrian Telethon 2013-04-06 05:53 PM (The following article is a re-posting from RTB.com) A recent liquidation auction brought more than $800,000 to the Herds for Kids and Community Foundation, but ProRodeoHelps.org uses some of that money to provide long-term solutions to working ranch families and children in need. To further those goals, ProRodeoHelps.org is hosting a telethon with over 600 participating sponsors. It will air live across various media platforms Monday, April 16, from 1 to 6pm CT on the Warner Cable Networks. The guild's charitable arm, Herds for Kids, supports the homeless and in need in the San Diego community, and the Community Foundation works to improve and revitalize downtown San Diego. During this call, ProRodeoHelps.org will work with its partners to find long-term solutions for working ranch families and children in need. "We have more than 600 sponsors, so we want to put together the best telethon as possible. We're hoping to get the call time right and average over three hours per call," said Jodi Ruffatti, TV media liaison for ProRodeoHelps.org and Herds for Kids. Despite a solid base of loyal donors and gracious sponsors (more than 60% of the funds will go to grant commitments), the evening will be a difficult-to-fill telethon, Ruffatti said. There is $800,000 in liquidation funds that will be available to ProRodeoHelps.org and Herds for Kids thanks to a recent sale at the Sheppard Cattle Auction in Cocoa, Fla. These funds will enable the guild to continue its mission as a humanitarian organization in the wake of a recent liquidation auction. "We're building the foundation for a new future, one in which the grassroots programs and projects that have contributed to our success in the past will continue," Ruffatti said. Pre-Won Association auction Besides the funds pledged to ProRodeoHelps.org, the guild has already made grant commitments for long-term projects in the San Diego and Imperial Counties. Throughout the past year, the guild has been fortunate to receive donations from various leagues, advertisers, vendors and
