Characteristics of the membrane electric potential and calcium current in proximal tubules of the rabbit. The micro-electrode recording method was applied to the proximal tubules of the rabbit in order to study the membrane properties of the cells. It was found that the cell membrane potential was significantly higher than the resting potential. Only in the absence of bath  $\text{CaCl}_2$ , the presence of low concentrations of  $\text{CaCl}_2$  (0.1-1.0 mM) caused hyperpolarization. In cells bathed in  $\text{CaCl}_2$ -containing solution (1.2 mM), exposure to both nifedipine (0.1-100  $\mu\text{M}$ ) and cadmium (0.1-1.0 mM) depolarized the cells, and the application of the two drugs could antagonize each other's action. The time constant of the activation of the current, as well as the slope of the current-voltage (I-V) relation, decreased with increasing  $\text{CaCl}_2$ . The current could be divided into two components: (1) a rapidly activating and inactivating component, and (2) a slowly activating component with a small slope of the I-V relation. The latter component was due to the  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$ -dependent slow  $\text{Ca}^{2+}$ -activated  $\text{K}^+$  (SK-Ca) current. The role of SK-Ca current and the mechanisms underlying the cell membrane potential were discussed. THE SEXIEST IN THE WILDLIFE Eating healthy is essential to dog and owner health. Letter to Teachers This letter from our CEO, Will Thompson, to graduates of the Teachers College at Columbia University—and all of us in education who believe that a great teacher can bring out the best in every child—is offered as a reminder of the work you have all done over the years, and a reminder of what more there is to be done. Dear Teacher, "Teachers are the heroes of the story. They are the ones who lift the children out of the dark silence into the sunlight. They are the ones who walk the mean streets to the guarded heart of every child. They are the ones who breathe life into the dark arts of reading and mathematics; the ones who infuse wonder into the classroom; the ones who lock eyes with hungry children on the playground. "The 'teacher-hero' is not the caricature that you might first imagine. The teacher hero is a quiet teacher. The teacher hero is the one who works with the children at a level of intensity that surpasses the level of his or her own need. They know that their work is the real work—the work of creation—and they are so locked into the children that they almost cease to be themselves. "The children learn to listen to the breath of a teacher hero. They learn to breathe in the sense of the teacher's voice. They learn to give themselves over to the teacher hero's gentle care. And this is the most extraordinary gift that a teacher can give to a child—the gift of his or her attention. "The teacher hero is in love with the child. He or she does not hide a love for the child from himself or herself—love for the child is self-love. He or she is constantly challenged to give himself or herself to the child. Love is his
