A new method of fabrication of single- and multi-walled carbon nanotubes (CNTs) using the hierarchical self-assembly of gold nanoparticles (AuNPs) is demonstrated. The AuNPs, assembled into a network through microfluidic channel structures, are stable and show favorable photothermal effects in the NIR region. The low concentration of AuNPs and the relative low plasmonic absorbance of CNTs can be combined to produce a higher yield of CNTs than traditional methods.Q: Why are iterators constants in the standard? I was reading through some of the algorithms in the C++ standard and found an intriguing fact: § 24.2.3 Operators [...] 20. An input iterator points to the first element of a sequence. [...] a constant input iterator [...] [...] 25. An output iterator does not participate in the iteration. [...] a constant output iterator...] I'm curious as to why the standard defines iterators as constants. Wouldn't it make more sense to make them "movable"? A: Because the standard wants to provide a consistent interface to container classes and to take advantage of existing type systems, rather than inventing yet another, to define an iterator as a value-semantic type. That's why, for example, const_iterator is defined as a value type, not a reference type. And note that the standard explicitly states that const_iterator is a constant, not a value or reference type. A:

What's new:

Orpheus: Fall For Eurydice is a 2013 American-Spanish science fiction action film directed by Mehdi Bakhshi, starring Manel Iglesias, John Hurt, Andy Bell and Ewa Mathieu. Originally titled Orfeo, the film's plot is described by producers as based on the myth of Orpheus, a musician who is accidentally shot by hunters and compelled to play music in order to call his beloved back from the dead. The events are told through flashbacks. Orpheus: Fall For Eurydice was theatrically released on May 25, 2013 in the United States by Image Entertainment. Plot Orpheus is set in the Sichuan Province of China, in an area known as the Forbidden City. Sun is both the son and the grandson of a hunter, and has learned the hunter's bushcraft and wilderness skills. At the age of ten, he comes home from hunting one day and finds his mother dead in her bed and a gun shot wound to her back. He immediately leaves to find his father, only to find the forest razed by hunters. Sun continues to wander and come across the corpses of many animals; he next comes across an oracle, who tells him that his mother is dead and that all animals are fleeing from one hunter, Fang, who looks like a bear. The oracle also tells Sun that Fang will come looking for him, as the oracle happens to have been Fang's oracle for a decade. Sun flees the area and seeks refuge in a church and clings to a bird's nest. After hearing the sound of a woman's voice singing, he begins to hallucinate of Eurydice, his beloved, and finds the dead bodies of other girls nearby. Sun is then transported to the church, where he stays throughout the day. After returning to his home, Sun finds a gun hidden under his mother's pillow and a note explaining that his uncle is paying him to become Fang's new oracle. Sun quickly flees and runs to Fang's house, where Fang demands his nephew's obedience. Sun finds Fang asleep and draws his gun. Sun escapes from Fang's house and watches as Fang is stabbed by the trunk of his own tree. The next morning, Sun arrives at the church, and asks the Father about Eurydice, who is being held captive. The Father explains that she is far from his parish, but that he has been able to track her location as Orpheus has
