This invention relates to mining or excavation equipment for breaking bulk, and more particularly, to a rear discharge mining machine that is capable of being interconnected with the commonly used front dump shovel of a common front end loader. In rear discharge mining machines, loaders, and the like, a mining machine or loader is provided for entraining mined material to a point where the same is discharged into a conveying means, such as a conveyor or the like, for subsequent use or disposal. Such a rear discharge mining machine or loader typically includes a material hopper or conveyor for receiving mined material, and a structure for gathering and holding the mined material in a heap so that the mined material can be conveyed or dumped from the loading point into the hopper or conveying structure. The loader body is movable from a forward dump position over the loading point to a rear dump position so that the loader can reach a dump point in the rear of the loader while being fed with the mined material from the dumping point in the front of the loader. Such a loader or mining machine is commonly provided with a hydraulic motor that is mechanically coupled or otherwise operatively connected to a conveying structure such as a conveyor. The hydraulic motor is driven by hydraulic pressure to operate the conveying structure. The hydraulic motor, however, will also serve as a loader for discharging or dumping the mined material loaded in the loader hopper or conveyor onto the rear dump point. In conventional rear discharge mining or loader machines, such as that illustrated in FIG. 1 and FIG. 2, a loader 10 is operatively connected to a dumping means, such as a conveyor 12. The loader 10 includes an elongated body having a rearwardly extending discharge point which is generally situated a predetermined distance from the dump point of the conveyor 12. As shown, the conveyor 12 has a discharge end 14 that is adjacent the dump point 16 and a discharge opening 18. The loader 10 further includes a material hopper 22, having a bottom discharge end 24 which is adjacent the dump point 16. In order to load the loader 10 with material, the loader 10 is backed to the dumping point 16 as shown in FIG. 1. The loader 10 is then moved forwardly toward the conveyor discharge end 14 such that the loader hopper 24 is positioned over the conveyor discharge end 14. Once the loader
