Dragon Ball Xenoverse: Racer .New York (CNN Business) Warren Buffett may be getting richer but he's not happy about it. The billionaire's Berkshire Hathaway Inc. BRK.A is one of the biggest investors in the fast-growing cannabis industry, and last week, it became the first publicly traded company to announce earnings from a cannabis operation. Analysts are expecting Berkshire to earn about $430 million from the Canadian company that it bought in late 2017. It raised the share price of the company by 20% in the after hours trading. On Twitter, Buffett offered a withering assessment of the business he had just invested in. "I wonder what happens if it turns out to be as bad as everyone thinks," he wrote. "Will the stock go to zero or to $100?" Read MoreQ: Dereferencing pointer to function returning void * with incompatible pointer type? I'm having trouble understanding the error in the following code. The class calls the getDelay() function which returns a pointer to a function taking a struct as a parameter and returning void * struct CallDelay { int getDelay() { return 5; } }; struct MyStruct { void * GetPtr() { return new CallDelay; } }; int main(void) { MyStruct *myStruct = new MyStruct(); CallDelay *ptr = myStruct->GetPtr(); //Error: expected ptr->getDelay(); } What am I doing wrong here? A: myStruct->GetPtr(); returns a pointer to the function, but the function returns a void *, which isn't compatible with CallDelay *ptr. You can use the function in a function: void foo(MyStruct *myStruct) { CallDelay *ptr = myStruct->GetPtr(); ptr->getDelay(); } int main(void) { MyStruct *myStruct = new MyStruct; foo(myStruct); delete myStruct; }
