The transcription of the PTH gene is regulated by many factors including vitamin D3 and retinoic acid (RA). The purpose of the present study was to determine the relationship of these two hormones in the regulation of the PTH gene. Thus, we examined effects of both hormones on the regulation of PTH mRNA in osteoblastic cell lines: 1. CFU-C3, an osteoblastic cell line, 2. OLETF, an animal model of type II diabetes mellitus that exhibits high PTH secretion, 3. ONP, a cell line derived from rat parathyroid, and 4. R3327, a cell line derived from human pancreatic carcinoma. The effects of vitamin D3 and RA on $1.3 \times 10(5)$ cells were examined using Northern blot analysis of the steady state level of PTH mRNA. 1,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3 increased the level of PTH mRNA in CFU-C3 in a dose-dependent manner. However, in OLETF, RA increased the level of PTH mRNA dose-dependently. In both cell lines, the level of PTH mRNA was maximally increased by 0.1 microM RA and 0.5 mM 1,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3. In R3327, PTH mRNA levels were suppressed by the addition of 1,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3 and RA. In ONP, PTH mRNA levels were decreased by the addition of vitamin D3, but the effect was completely suppressed by simultaneous addition of 1,25-dihydroxyvitamin D3. The transactivator activity of vitamin D3 and RA in the upstream region of the PTH gene was examined by measuring the transactivation of beta-galact 0cc13bf012
