Description: Compared to iOS, the Android market has a huge selection of apps to choose from and it. Wilmot is a village in Guernsey, Channel Islands. It is located in the north east of Guernsey, near the border with Alderney. It is sited on the cliffs overlooking the English Channel from either the northern or the eastern sides. Population Its population was 2,065 at the 2011 census, and 2,159 in June 2012. It is much smaller than the parish of St Andrew, which has 4,870 residents.[1] Wilmot is an ecclesiastical parish governed by the dean of Sark, and along with St Andrew, is part of the Crown

Dependencies of Guernsey. Location The village is about 4.5 miles (7 km) from the island's capital, St Peter Port. The Roman town of Alderney, which was founded in the 1st century AD, is about 3 miles (5 km) south of Wilmot. History The name of the village comes from the Old English word "wilge", meaning 'wild or unenclosed land', and is associated with a situation where sheep grazed freely in the hills. In the 17th century, it was said to be near the Devil's Cave in the cliffs, which was reputedly haunted by ghosts. A 'Pettish Lane' also ran down the north-east of the village. Wilmot Dock was built around 1840, and closed in the 1970s. There were two other channels: St Martin and Red Rock. Near the castle that was once the home of the Dukes of Guernsey, another set of cliffs came down, which created an inlet called the "Ferry", making the two channels confluent. The old ferry across the channel was replaced by a bridge in the 1950s, but the old road bridge which is now a footpath still remains over this stretch of the sea. The tunnels under it are still visible. On the coast, RAF St Andrews, which had two hangars in the late 1930s, were replaced by a new base. There were also seven Imperial Flight Training Schools and a large airfield close to the village. The village was taken completely by the German forces during the Second World War. The St Mary's War Memorial was built in the seaside. Most of the houses in the village were returned during the 6d1f23a050
