Mad Max: Fury Road's Tom Hardy Will Star in The Dao of Death While we wait for the fever-dreamy madness of Mad Max: Fury Road to flood our brains, Warner Bros. has announced that they will be bringing a new film to the big screen, The Dao of Death, in which Tom Hardy will star. The film is a "road trip through the history of violence" and the film's trailer begins with Arnold Schwarzenegger's Terminator in the future and asks, "What happened next?". The clip then shows Tom Hardy in the present and asks, "What will happen next?". The Dao of Death Writer-director Joel Anderson's "multi-media experiment" seeks to answer both questions by combining film, animation, sculpture, poetry, and music. The trailer is one of the most eclectic trailers we have ever seen and Hardy will help to pull it off, even if some of the animation is a tad amateurish. Hardy will also produce the film and there is no word on who else may be lending their voice talents.

Talking about the idea, Anderson said: "The Dao of Death wants to ask the question: What if civilisation fell? What if humanity and technology were thrown back to the Stone Age? What if man's primal instincts took over and there was no longer any law or order or morality? What if the future of humanity was to seek the dao (Way, Path, Way) in an attempt to evolve back to who they once were? "In my search for the answer to these questions, I've found the fascination of an iconic film from a bygone era, Dead Again, which features an amazing collection of animation with a genuine story that steers us into a thinking experience. Also, my inspiration was also the techniques and approach of a road trip movie. "Joel and I are hoping to use this unique blend of visual styles and storytelling to bring together an epic road movie, a vibrant combination of animation, sculpture, performance,
