

A: It sounds like you may be including a legal product to which you aren't entitled. Under what licensing regime is this aircraft available? Most legal products - especially aircraft - are available only from the original manufacturers. You are using the VFR24, which is a registered trademark of Aermacchi, and I presume that you didn't acquire it from Aermacchi. You probably weren't "licenced" for it in any way, although that's a long and murky legal process. If it is unlicensed, there's a good chance that it's a counterfeit aircraft. For most models, this means that you're operating under the wrong designation and/or model. In some places, local regulations and laws forbid certain aircraft because of structural inadequacies or other nastiness. For example, there's a federal ban on certain types of powered aircraft in some parts of the country. In other places, laws prevent certain types of flights because of aeronautical responsibilities. For example, the overland flight ban in the USA is designed to prevent accidents involving commercial aircraft. In all cases, the manufacturer has no obligation to provide a crack-proof licensing program. As others have pointed out, cracking software has been around for years. The original manufacturer may have done it, or some unscrupulous third party may have taken their crack and added it to a counterfeit catalog, or some rip-off seller may be selling it. Whatever the reason, the manufacturer may have one too many buyers asking for an unofficial crack and decided it wasn't worth the trouble. In the end, you're a guinea pig. The manufacturer knows that people will buy their stuff just to try it. They may have commissioned your video, expecting to help their business and providing a crack for it at no charge. You are an unanticipated expense. A: It is customary to avoid cracks and if the game is cracked you can simply uninstall it and install the original game and your license is intact. Short communication: Estimating the genetic parameters of milk components from Irish Holstein-Friesian cows. Data from 7,425,800 single milk records from 2,772 Irish Holstein-Friesian cows were used to estimate genetic parameters of milk components including protein and fat percentages, butterfat and protein yield, and fat and protein yields. Estimates of heritability of milk components were generally moderate to high (0.25 to 0.40) with the exception of protein
