The faster-is-slower (FIS) phenomenon, observed in many ionic liquids (ILs), is central for their dissolution behaviors. Specifically, ILs' solvation behavior of the model systems is a function of the size of the ionic solute. Traditionally, this phenomenon has been explained by a transient dipole. We demonstrate, through theoretical calculations and molecular dynamics simulations, that the FIS phenomenon arises from solvation-aversion interactions in the region just outside the hydrated solute. These interactions depend not only on the strength of dipole moments and size of the solute, but also on the length of the intervening ionic liquid.Q: Curl request sometimes returns wrong data I am sending a curl request to a device and it only happens around 80% of the time c6a93da74d
