The Presto UI will make this connection easier to follow. To view the connection, open up the browser and navigate to your IP address of 127.0.0.1, we recommend Apache or nginx for this. You can also open the IP address locally from a program such as a web browser and it will automatically be forwarded to your local IP address. We recommend using the browser on the remote connection so that you can see the hostname and IP address. For this demo, we have a single node cluster and running Presto on the same host as Cassandra. To create this instance of the Node graph, you will need to choose Create Node from the tab. Now you will need to set the connector and host URL. For Presto, we will use 127.0.0.1, for the name of the node, and 127.0.0.1 again. Once this is configured, you will be able to select Connect and send a request. Now that you have built and deployed your Presto instance, you can return to the notebook. Click Configure Node from the upper left hand corner. Then select Node from the side panel.
