Dante begins his quest. He is initially rejected by the castle's guards, but they agree to help when he tells them that he is not a detective, but a demon hunter; and then asks them for their help to find Trish, who apparently escaped. Dante later accompanies a trio of the guards to the emperor's chamber. He and the guards encounter and incapacitate the emperor's sister and his right-hand man, but the emperor is able to send the guards out of the room while he and Trish escape. Dante, the guards, and a soldier follow the emperor's tracks to a club, where he is waiting for Trish with a trio of devils. He kills one of them, and is about to stab the other when the emperor jumps in and fights him, killing Dante's ally and the Emperor's brother. Dante and the two remaining soldiers proceed to escape on a ship by sabotaging the propulsion system. They decide to head back to the surface, after an accident that caused their ship to crash, to determine Mundus' whereabouts and attack him when he's least expecting it. As they near the city, they are attacked by demons. Dante and his two companions fight them off; but as Dante falls, he is possessed by one of the demons, and the soldier's fall leaves Dante alone to face the devil. A few of Dante's bullets hit their mark as he fights his way through various demons. As his body gets weaker, so does the demons. Mundus is revealed in his true form as a demon of colossal proportions. Unsurprisingly, Dante and his deadly bullets eventually slay him. In the final duel, Dante controls his demonic strength to kill Mundus' invulnerable demon ally. As he moves in for the kill, he hesitates when Mundus tells him that he's "fallen so low", and is about to kill Dante when he is pummeled by Trish's attack and dies. 5ec8ef588b
