Microsoft Office Professional Plus 2013 Language Pack Greek

It is possible to set the content and UI of an Office product, or Office Add-in, or even the online version of an Office product, to your preference or market preference. If you use a language pack that is for the localization of user interface (UI) and the UI of an Office client in the local language, you can set the UI of the Office client to display in the language you want. But this affects only the UI of Office and you can't use a language pack for the localization of the content or functional features of the product. For instance, in Excel 2016, there is a list of commonly used Excel functions in the Help system, but the list will only display in the language of the UI. If you want to display the English Excel Help list even if you use a French or German interface, then you must use an Office language pack. How can you see whether the display language is installed on your PC? Microsoft Office has a Language list that shows the languages it is currently set to use. For instance, if the Office language pack that you installed is the Greek one, then the Language list will show that. On the other hand, if the language that you installed is the English one, then the Language list will show that. All the languages supported by Microsoft Office 2013 are shown in the Language list. You can use this list to set the languages that you want. The Display Language is the language that is used in Windows if you select your language from the Regional menu in the Control Panel. The Editing language is the language that is used in the user interface of Microsoft Office for the menus and dialog boxes. 5ec8ef588b
