For example, this code will let the site

create an image filename based on a category/tag. This basically just makes sure every image filename has a sequential number based on how many images it serves. For instance, if your site served 1,000 images, this would create a filename like this: `images/post-##.jpg` With this filename, the thumbnail would automatically be created for the specific post (and is saved as `images/post-##.jpg`) Of course, the same is true of an image taken from a URL. In this case, it would be the URL stripped of the querystring (anything following the `?`). For example, `mysite.com/images/dog.jpg` would become `mysite.com/images/dog.jpg`, and the thumbnail would be created with that filename. So, not only does YARPP have the ability to turn on `echo yarpp_related();` or `get_the_excerpt();` functions in the code, there are also a variety of options within YARPP that can improve your efficiency and the look of your site. The best part of all is that this plugin is totally free.
