The new Develop module has been redone, contrary to my expectation that Adobe would continue with its previous methodology. The previous develop module enabled you to apply a set of adjustments and view the results more closely with the help of the Display Channels, Channel Mixer, and Spot Removal tools. The sights I see in the Lightroom 5 develop module look similar to those that I had experienced in the CS3 develop module. However, in Lightroom 5 I don't see the same alternative development channel, the double spot removal option, or the spot removal panel, which is available only with Photoshop. The center image of the Develop module once again looks a bit messy. There is a sequence of options that show in a small panel at the top left of the image. It's a bit confusing at first, but it can be understood easily at a later point.
