Canonical product codes in the open-source OpenStack cloud platform consist of a number and a letter, where the number represents a sequential number, and the letter is assigned by the software implementation for that component. The product number (PID) of OpenStack is given by the base product series + the component number. This means that the Linux container product is designated as Cinder x.y.z + 0, while the Ceph distributed storage product is designated as Cinder x.y.z + 1. The x.y.z designation represents a combination of the base product series and the service release series, e.g. Liberty x.y.z + 0. The OpenStack Foundation provides precise definitions for the number and service release designations. The OpenStack Foundation also provides a process by which the final designator (e.g. Cinder x.y.z + 0) is determined based on the date on which a project is taken live in the OpenStack Cloud Service.
