For the first time ever, an astronomical observatory will host a presidential inauguration. The one-year anniversary of the inauguration of the Donald Trump presidency and inauguration of the moon revolution on January 21, 2017 is on January 20, 2018. Inaugurations in the 21st century are usually a simple celebration of the "official" beginning of a new term in the office of the presidency. Inauguration celebrations are usually limited to one city, and often, just one city. Some have argued that in keeping with the modern trend, it would be good to get rid of this tradition, and have a celebration of all Americans, all Americans everywhere, celebrating the inauguration of President Trump and of the moon revolution. The new moon revolution is the same day, and the new moon revolution is the same day the inauguration of Donald Trump. The new moon revolution was a social experiment that left behind the old ways and made it possible to communicate instantly with the moon in front of everyone. It was achieved when millions of Americans were watching the moon and a simple laptop or smartphone video was sent to the Moon in front of everyone. It was a social experiment. It was an experiment that involved everyone. It was a moon revolution. It was a revolution of millions of Americans that changed the way we think about everything and everyone. The inaugural of Donald Trump The inauguration of Donald Trump will be broadcast worldwide, in front of millions of people. This is the first time the inauguration will be broadcast. Not only will it be the first time the inauguration will be broadcast worldwide, but it will also be the first time anyone will see a president-elect get sworn in in a dark theatre with no one watching.
