It created the common copyright license for creative works, the Creative Commons Attribution-Share Alike (CC-BY-SA) license, in 2005. It is a recognized nonprofit, non-governmental organization, has no shareholders, and operates with no profit motive. , CC has over 2.6 million members. Most members use CC licenses to make the terms of their content available for others to reuse, remix and build on. CC members can either add a notice to their work, or they can embed a web link to the license on their work. The organization licenses an array of content, including media, documents, computer code, and scientific research. It provides technical support to both registered users and the general public. Many online communities use Creative Commons licenses. CC licenses may be added to software, media or document files and printed materials. History Creative Commons was founded in 2001 by Lawrence Lessig and Eric Eldred, who were then professors of law at the University of California, Berkeley and Stanford Law School, respectively. CC holds patent rights for the Creative Commons License, the Creative Commons Compatible License, the Creative Commons Attribution Noncommercial Share Alike License and the Attribution Share Alike License.
