Brain magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) findings in 29 children with acute leukemias [Group I (GI): leukemic phase] were compared with findings in 20 children with leukemic phase without evidence of brain lesions (Group II), 10 children without hematological diseases (Group III) and 30 normal children (Group IV). The mean age was 8 years in GI; 12 and 11 years in Groups II and III, respectively, and 9 years in Group IV. It was shown that more than 60% of children with leukemia had white matter lesions (WML), subcortical lacunar and chronic white matter degeneration (WMD). In particular, WMD could be more frequent in GI; WMD and chronic WML had higher incidence in GI than in Groups II, III and IV. In contrast, the other lesions were not different among the four groups. The incidence of leukoencephalopathy (which includes WMD and WML) was high in GI compared with Group II (61% vs 13%, $P = 0.0002$), and in GI than in Groups III (61% vs 8%, $P = 0.002$) and IV (61% vs 7%, $P = 0.01$). Our results suggest that leukoencephalopathy is not only associated with leukemia but also with old irradiation in patients with leukemia. leis1118878acompositenum
