Anisotropic AFM fabrication on magnetizable metals. This work explores the use of anisotropic atomic force microscopy (AFM) to fabricate nanoscale features on the magnetizable metal Pd and Pt. Using a scanning force microscope coupled to a sample holder for the application of magnetic fields, AFM topographies were created from both the in-plane and out-of-plane directions. Magnetization was suppressed by subsequent heating in a current-applied magnetic field. The effects of the substrate properties and the degree of magnetic anisotropy on the formation of features are explored.
